Life in Chile

Life in Chile

Welcome to Santiago! We know you must be excited about beginning your adventure in Chile's capital and eager to prepare for your arrival. We have put together some basic health information with tips to help you stay healthy and safe during your semester here. We want to ensure that you have the best study abroad experience possible.

Water: The tap water in Chile is potable, but like in any other country, it may take time to acclimate your body to the different levels of chlorine and other chemicals that they use to clean it. Many people have no problem, but we suggest that you start with drinking only bottled water and slowly introduce the tap water.

Fruits and vegetables: Fresh produce is abundant and cheaply available all-year in Santiago. Be sure to wash vegetables thoroughly, to remove the dust and pollution before you eat them.

Mobile phones: As an exchange student at FEN, it is compulsory that you have a Chilean phone number so that we can contact you in emergencies. Pre-paid phones are both efficient and affordable. They can be bought in most Malls, large supermarkets, and company stores. The three main telephone companies are Entel, Wom!, Movistar and Claro. Entel has an emergency feature that allows you to borrow money to make a call or send an emergency text message to another number requesting they call you, if necessary. Other companies may have similar features so do ask when you are shopping. Alternatively, you can bring an unlocked phone with you, and purchase a SIM card to use with it. You will have to register your unlocked phone through this website

Street food: Food vendors can be found on most street corners and in the ferias, or markets. This is where Chileans get most of their produce, but be extra cautious if consuming food or drinks sold on the street.

Life in Chile

Street safety: In Santiago, like in any big city, it is important to be aware of your valuables. Be careful about using your phone or other electronic devices in the street and always have a firm grip on your bag and backpack.

While on the metro, especially during rush hour, be sure to carry your backpack in front of you and to ensure all pockets are well closed. Mobile phones and other electronics should be put away securely, not in the outside pockets of your coat, bag, or backpack.

It is best to leave your flashy or valuable jewelry and accessories at home when spending the day in the street or in certain neighborhoods. More information about keeping safe in Santiago will be given on Student Orientation Day. While eating at a restaurant, especially if it is an outside patio, be sure to leave your bags and backpacks tied to the chair next to you or firmly in between your legs.

If you are pickpocketed, please go to the nearest Comisaria de Carabineros (Police Station) or Retén Móvil (Mobile Police Station) to report the incident. Your travel insurance will request the police report in order to process a refund.

Emergencies: : In case of an emergency, go to your nearest hospital (see section on Hospitals) or local Health Care Center (consultorio). Request receipts if you plan to be excused from classes or get reimbursed by your insurance company.

Hospitals: In general, the word “hospital” refers to the public ones while the word “clinic” is the word used for private ones. The good news is that both public and private hospitals offer access to high quality healthcare at affordable prices. Before landing in Chile, make sure you have international travel and health insurance that will provide you with the coverage for the duration of your stay.

HOUSING

This guide provides contact for different types of living arrangements: Host families, Shared Apartments (Departamentos Compartidos), Residencies/Boarding Houses (Residencias), and Rooms (Habitaciones). The following pages provide information for each option. Between these contacts and the list of housing websites on the next page, you should have no trouble finding housing either before you arrive in Santiago or when you arrive in person.

THINGS TO CONSIDER:

Location: Think about how your commute to FEN will contribute to your experience and the environmental impact it has. Take a look at the following symbols so you can consider your best commuting options:

means that the location is 30 mins or less walking to/from FEN (0 carbon emissions)

bike-able

metro accessible

HOUSING

A long commute can affect how much you enjoy your semester. Even though Santiago has a good public transportation system, the metro is extremely busy during peak times and some stations may close if there are protests nearby. Consider the map below to avoid living in protest hotspots and choose a safer commute to FEN:

HOUSING

Climate: Santiago has a cool semi-arid climate with Mediterranean patterns. These include warm, dry summers (October to March) with temperatures reaching up to 40 °C (95 °F) on the hottest days. Winters (April to September) are cool and humid, with cool to cold mornings. Typical daily maximum temperatures of 14 °C (57 °F), and low temperatures near 0 °C (32 °F). Most properties do not have central heating or air conditioning. It will be very cold inside a building during the winter so check what the policy is for using electric and gas heaters in your property as many property owners charge extra for this or even prohibit their use.

Try before you buy: We recommend that, when possible, visit the accommodations before confirming and/or paying any money to the property owner(s). Check out the list of hostels used by previous students for places to base yourself while viewing properties.

Prices: Prices and availability of Student Residences, Hostels, Host Families and/or Shared Apartments, etc. are not managed, controlled, or established by FEN and are subject to change because they are private providers. Please check with the individual providers and services for up-to-date information on prices and availability.
